

Harry Potter books have been challenged more than any other books in the United States for the past FOUR years, according to the American Library Association.

Last year, in Cedarville, Arkansas, a parent complained that Harry Potter books show “that there are good witches and good magic.”

They also teach “that parents/teachers/rules are stupid and something to be ignored,” she said.

The Cedarville school board removed the books from the shelves of its libraries, refusing to let students even look at them without their parents’ permission!

What can YOU do to stop the censorship of Harry Potter?

If you’re a KID, visit kidSPEAK! where kids speak up for free speech, www.kidspeakonline.org.

If you’re an ADULT, join the American Booksellers Foundation for Free Expression (ABFFE), www.abffe.com.

ABFFE supported two Cedarville parents who filed a legal challenge to the censorship of Harry Potter—AND WE WON! The books are back on the shelves.
